Two is better than one, in List there are two lighthouses.

Ellenbogen
The narrow peninsula which bends eastward north of List like an arm bent over the head is called Ellenbogen (‘elbow’) and is private land (drivers pay a toll charge). Here there is nothing but dunes, sea, wind and vastness. At the north beach of the western Ellenbogen, the hiker is virtually standing on the “tip” of Germany. Ellenbogen is a nature reserve and bird sanctuary.

Lister wandering dunes
The white dunes west of List actually still wander. They shift eastward an average of six, in some years up to ten metres every year. Such dunes buried Old Rantum and Old List in the past. Today, the three dunes in Listland are the only nonplanted dunes and are protected.

Cliffs
The island’s cliffs offer spectacular vistas and views. Even if the names of the cliffs may remind you of rocks, it is about a steep coast (Frisian: “Klef”) which the surf has rinsed from a range of hills for about 9,000 years. The most popular photo motif among the steep coasts is the five kilometre-long “Red Cliff” that rises to nearly 30 metres between Wenningstedt and Kampen, and reveals where its name comes from during a setting sun. Geologists most likely prefer Morsum Cliff where you can see ten million years of earth’s history compressed into a few square kilometres (tip: take part in a geological tour!). The “White Cliff” shines between Munkmarsch and Braderup, while the mudflat walk in Keitum passes by the “Green Cliff”.

Uwe-Dune
The platform on the islands highest natural elevation, the Uwe-Dune, is remarkable 52 metres above the North Sea. A footpath leads from the end of Kurhaus-straße in Kampen to the foot of the dune. There, you have 110 steps of the wooden staircase to overcome until there is a magnificent view overlooking Sylt.

Braderup Heath
Half of the heath area of the entire State of Schleswig-Holstein is located on Sylt. The Braderup Heath Nature Reserve is the largest of the heaths on the island with an area of nearly 140 hectares. Common heather (Calluna vulgaris), which blossoms purple in late summer, is characteristic for this landscape, which provides a habitat for 2,500 animal species. What looks and smells like pure nature is actually a cultural landscape, a stage of development between the clearing of woodland and new growth through birch, oak and beech trees. The Naturschutze- gemeinschaft (Sylt Nature Conservation Association) offers guided tours, including the heathland, starting at Braderup Nature Center. A newly conceived exhibition on the island’s habitat and herbal garden can also be discovered there.

Sylt Aquarium
Only a few metres from the water’s edge and very close to the beach, there are quite a few indigenous as well as exotic fishes on Sylt. In the Aquarium south of Westerland, a section of the 25 pools is dedicated to the North Sea and its inhabitants, whereas the other section is dedicated to tropical oceans with their coral worlds. Visitors walk through the two largest pools in glass tunnels. Aquarium officials are particularly proud of the zebra sharks as well as leopard whiprays. Dogs are welcome here.

Wadden Sea
Sylt is located in the middle of the Schleswig-Holstein Wadden Sea National Park, which also bears the title UNESCO World Heritage Site. The habitat is defined by changing tides, salty water of the North Sea and strong wind. These special conditions have virtually cultivated “experts” such as the common glasswort, a plant which grows on the frequently flooded salt meadows on the eastern side of the island, or the lugworm, which lives from organic substances in the sand of soil. Mud flats are also a breeding and resting place for numerous bird species. There are numerous opportunities to explore this unique natural environment, such as a mud flats hike or a boat tour with an explanation of marine animals as well as an ornithological tour. Tourism services of the respective village provide information. The facilities of the association “Wadden Sea Conservation Station”, which takes care of parts of the national park, are good places to go.

Propoises
As part of the national park, the small propoise sanctuary west of Sylt offers harbour propoises a quiet zone for breeding and rearing offspring. With a bit of luck, their triangular dorsal fins can been seen from the beach on quiet evenings.

Arche Wattenmeer
The Wadden Sea Conservation Station exhibition known as “Arche Wattenmeer” (“Wadden Sea Ark”) in the former Catholic Church in Hörnum has been open since summer of 2013. The exhibition primarily deals with the open North Sea. Inside the Ark, small and large guests can experience underwater landscapes in a playful manner while understanding contexts and deepening their knowledge.

Hörnum-Odde
During a walk around the southern tip of the island, preferably at low tide, you can experience the faces of both of Sylt’s beaches well within one hour: a gentle beach on the eastern side and a wild beach of the open sea in the west. However, this is also the most vulnerable spot of the island. Current and storm tides gnaw away at Hörnum-Odde. About 15 years ago a hike took three hours, whereas today it is only 1.5 hours.
Denghoog

Denghoog is located next to the Frisian chapel in Wenningstedt and was built about 5,000 years ago. It is one of the largest megalithic tombs in Northern Europe. Twelve boulders support three massive cover stones. The heaviest weights about 20 tons. The gravesite was discovered in 1868. Grave discoveries such as vessels, axes and amber pearls are stored at Gottorf Castle in Schleswig. Copies can be seen in the local heritage museum in Keitum.

Local heritage museums

In two Keitum houses which are only a few metres apart it becomes clear how Sylt residents lived in former times.

The “Altfrisches Haus” (“Old Frisian House”), built in the early 18th century as a captain’s house, was later inhabited by local historian Christian Peter Hansen (1803–1879). It was established in 1908 as a museum for residential culture of the 18th and early 19th century. A hearth and tiles, alcove beds and household equipment can be admired in rooms with names such as Kööken, Kööv und Piisel as well as other rooms.

  - Am Kliff 13, Keitum
  - phone: +49 (0) 4651 / 31 101

The local heritage collection from Christian Peter Hansen (see above) was the basis for the “Sylt Local Heritage Museum”, which depicts the island’s history in terms of archaeology up until about 1850. One room is dedicated to the great era of Sylt captains, and one room is dedicated to Uwe Jens Lornsen, one of the campaigners from Schleswig-Holstein’s independence. A permanent exhibition addresses the theologian, painter and photographer Magnus Weidemann.

Cemetery for the Homeless

Laid out in 1854 as the cemetery for shipwrecked people, it was located outside the village Westerland. 55 unknown seamen are buried here — by far not the only ones who were washed up on Sylt, but before that time corpses were simply buried in the dunes.

hünen.kulTour

Hardly an area in Germany was characterised in former times to such an extent by burial mounds and megalithic tombs as the North Frisian Islands and therefore also Sylt. You can discover the historic sites on three tours.

Churches

St. Severin Church in Keitum, a Sylt landmark and a special site, is already visible from Hindenburg Dam. The oldest part, the apse, probably dates from the 12th century. The sister church in Morsum, St. Martin, has a wooden belfry instead of a tower. The St. Niels village church, hidden in the old part of Westerland (on Kirchenweg), dates from from 1635. St. Thomas (a white, sail-shaped church) in Hörnum dates back to 1969/70 and is the youngest historic church building in Schleswig-Holstein.

Musical pleasure on the highest level can also be experienced in Sylt’s churches; for instance, weekly concerts are offered on Wednesdays at St. Severin in Keitum and every Sunday from June until October at St. Nicolai. Music is also performed in other churches on Sylt, above all during the summer season.

Stories about Westerland’s churches: “Whaling, World Cup – Christmas”

In the course of a walk from St. Niels village church over to St. Nicolai parish church participants will learn much about olden days on Sylt and the town’s development into a seaside resort with an international reputation.
Westerland's history is closely interwoven with the history of the town's churches: Pastor Christoph Bornemann can also share interesting, surprising and amusing details and anecdotes to this end! Tours are offered 6 to 8 times a year. A participation fee of 5 € is requested. From the end of June until the end of August, services are held on Sundays at 11:30 am in the Musikmuschel ("Music Shell") on Westerland's promenade. From July until August, Tuesdays at 9 pm blessing in the Musikmuschel.

Concerts, readings, theatre
During holiday season, tourism services invite visitors to enjoy numerous events ranging from boulevard comedy to chamber concerts. Kampen Literature and Music Summer events are well-known and annually feature best-seller authors reading in front of a big audience. "Musik am Meer" ("Music by the Seaside") with summertime concerts in the Musikmuschel ("Music Shell") on Westerland's promenade also has many fans.

Kursaal³
Since Easter 2015 the new kursaal³ offers an exciting and multi-faceted programme on top of the Wenningstedt Cliff. The programme includes not only cabaret, jazz, shanties and classic, acrobatics, and illusions but also stand-up comedy and readings. Important figures such as Heinz Rudolf Kunze, Stefan Gwildis and Konstantin Wecker, comedians or new-comers like Tim Becker and Simon Glöde, inside tips such as Song-Ping-Pong and Sylt artists like Jo Bohnsack or Sylt Shanty Choir have already performed in kursaal³ and are part of the versatile repertoire. For the complete programme see www.kursaal3-sylt.de

Additionally kursaal³ offers congresses, fairs and family parties.

Arts and crafts
Goldsmiths, potters, glass blowers and weavers, who manufacture traditional handicrafts, art and Sylt inspiration, are particularly at home in Keitum.

Söl’ring Foriining
The Sylt Association (Frisian: Söl’ring Foriining) established in 1906 takes care of the preservation of Sylt customs and Sylt’s Frisian language, landscape preservation and coastal protection. Söl’ring Foriining operates the local heritage museum and the "Old Frisian House" in Keitum as well as the Söl’ring Museum in Wenningstedt and the Vogelkoje. The association numbers around 2,700 members, among them also many holidaymakers.

Sylt source
Ideas also spring forth on the grounds of the Sylt source (Sylt-Quelle) mineral water source in Rantum. The private foundation "kunst:raum sylt quelle", which accommodates approx. 50 scholars from all fields of art every year, is at home here. The most famous scholarship is "writer in residence". Exhibitions from contemporary artists can be seen in the glass Spring House (Quellenhaus) on the first floor above the restaurant. Outside sculptures emphasise features in the landscape between Rantum Basin and Hafenstraße. The Sea Cabaret (Meerkabarett) features highlights of the cabaret and entertainment scene during the season.

Vogelkoje
Inhabitants of Sylt constructed Kampen Vogelkoje (Bird Sanctuary, originally a duck decoy) in 1767 according to the model of Dutch duck trapping facilities. Almost 700,000 ducks were killed there between 1809 and 1921. They were tempted to take a rest by means of a pond, and then enticed into a net by means of narrow fenced water channels. The Bird Sanctuary has been under protection status since 1935. The trapping facility and an educational trail as well as reconstructed caretaker houses with exhibitions are open to the public.

Tinnum Castle
The story of the rampart on Tinnum meadows lies in the darkness of history. The circular rampart with a diameter of 120 metres probably has been a sacred place in the 1st century already. Today's visible wall with a height of roughly seven metres stems from these years. Later, roughly between the 8th and 10th century during the Viking era, its inside served as a fortress to protect houses.

There are also marathon and half-marathon routes. Starting boards in all villages explain route guidance and provide tips for proper technique. Sylt etiquette guide

General information about swimming
Beach visitors are well taken care of at official swimming spots: Experienced and local lifeguards keep watch over their respective beach section and are experts in tides and currents. They have to proof their skills in an annual test. Beach visitors should inform themselves about the latest safety and swimming rules and follow instructions of the lifeguards at all times because the sea can be unexpectedly dangerous. This applies especially to areas outside supervised swimming spots.

Dune protection means and coastal protection
Dunes provide a natural protective wall against the surging sea. The dunes are stabilized by laborious cultivation of beach grass. Though, the plants are sensitive. As more and more holidaymakers are looking for a sunbathing spot in the dunes and meanwhile destroy the vegetation, there is a severe entry prohibition for Sylt’s dunes since 1978. Furthermore, the beaten tracks off the official paths are completely closed.

Feeding sea gulls is prohibited
They belong to Sylt like sand to the beach: sea gulls. However, these birds have become a plague by now. This applies especially to Westerland’s main beach and promenade. By feeding animals and an increasing number of breeding places on rooftops, the population grew enormously in the past few years. At the same time, the voracious birds became more impudent. Especially at Westerland’s promenade hundreds of hungry herring gulls lurk for everything edible, such as ice-cream cones or fish rolls held by children and adults. Therefore, the city of Westerland issued a ban on feeding sea gulls. Offences against it will be prosecuted. By feeding sea gulls or other wildlife animals you do them harm and it has a negative impact on behaviour and health.

Holiday with your dog
The low season is basically advisable as the ideal travel period for dog owners, because it offers the most freedom for their pets. Then all of the beaches on Sylt are available for walks. An obligation to leash dogs only exists in strongly frequented areas. Appropriate consideration of other dog owners and walkers generally applies. However, a leashing obligation always applies in the nature reserves, i.e. in the dunes and heathland. At many places, for example at refuse bins or along walking paths, there are special dog bag dispensers for the excrements of the four-legged guests. A large number of landlords on Sylt also gladly welcome four-legged guests and have made special arrangements for the needs of animals.

Lots of wind for kite flying
It is great for pilots when the taut kite lines slice horizontally through the air just above the beach, but it is rather frightening for walkers and bathing guests. Even if the wind on Sylt almost nearly announces kite time, stunt kites are prohibited on busy beach sections and in breeding areas for birds. Please heed the respective utilisation provisions for stunt kites in the individual municipalities.

Frisian stone wall: a work of art
The piles of stones were originally intended to deter wind, but in the meantime they actually serve as a garden fence. They may look stable, but they are definitely not suitable as a bench or climbing frame.

People live here: the locals
Particularly in picturesque Keitum, many locals can relate stories of holidaymakers who suddenly stand in a private living room and eye up the fireplace or sit in the garden and order coffee and cake. In fact, genuine Sylt natives exist, and they also live in the beautiful Frisian houses. The village is not an open-air museum!

Searching for accommodation
Holiday accommodation, guesthouse rooms and luxury suites can be found in the accommodation directory. Every island village publishes an accommodation directory annually, while a directory for the whole island is published by Sylt Marketing GmbH (SMG). Search requests on the online platforms can be filtered by site, date, price category or other criteria.

Radio and television
Always and everywhere up to date: interviews, motion pictures, quotes and reports on top events from one source.
